

STARS ATTEND DUBLIN PREMIERE.

An aircraft touches down at Collinstown bringing some stars-in-the-news from England. Workers on the airfield spare a moment to wave a welcome to one of Hollywood's brightest and most beautiful leading ladies, Yvonne de Carlo. Yvonne, who is fast becoming a permanent resident on this side of the Atlantic, is here to attend the Dublin premiere of her new film, the Mario Zampi Production "Happy Ever After", a rellicking Irish comedy in Technicolour. And here's another young star, Susan Stephen - a pretty little miss with a big future ahead of her.

Mr. Macgregor Scott, the General Sales Manager of Associated British-Pathe who are distributing the film, is another who attends the premiere of "Happy Ever After" at the Adelphi Cinema. And, yes there to help in the handshakes is the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Alfred Byrns, one of the most popular figures ever to hold the post of first citizen.

General Keown, the new Minister of Defence, is one of the guests at the premiere. Two more are the Argentine Ambassador and his wife.

Many leading Dublin personalities, including the Minister of Health, Dr. Higgins, and Mr. McGilligan, the Attorney General, are present. Another who flew from England for the premiere is Mario Zampi who produced and directed the film.

And here's Susan Stephen again - adding further glamour and sparkle to the Irish premiere of the new Irish colour comedy.
