MISS WORLD.

At the Lyceum, London, the sixteen most beautiful women in the world face the judges - Gracie Fields and Ben Lyon among them - to compete for the title "Miss World". Karin Bultman represent America in the contest organised by Mecca Dancing in association with the Sunday Dispatch. Grete Hoffenblad is this year's "Miss Denmark".

A beauty from Britain - Pat Butler. Five feet seven inches of levelness.

Now Miss France - otherwise Claudine Blouse. Last year a countrywoman of hers won the "Miss World" title, but Claudine doesn't complete the double. Miss Egypt, Antigone Constanta, a dark-eyed, brown-haired beauty makes the biggest hit with the judges - and yes, she's the winner, the new Miss World - a popular choice, except with some of her rivals. "Not beautiful" say some, too fat says another - even (believe it or not) "Too much sex-appeal". What do the men say? Not a word; we just look.
