

5-211201

54/86.

REMEMBER, REMEMBER - FIREWORKS.

When the Bonfire Queens take over from the Bathing Belles, then we know winter's really here. Down at Headcorn in Kent, they've all been affected by the Guy Fawkes's bug, and a full-scale carnival procession, is their way of saluting the man who, three hundred and fifty years ago, did his darndest to put paid to Parliament once and for all. It's also their way of getting together more than £100 for the National Spastics Society - so what better reason for getting lit up in the biggest way they can.

Now the high, colourful set-pieces, climaxed by a sparkling portrait of Her Majesty the Queen.