

5-251001
5/87.

QUEEN GOES XMAS SHOPPING.

Her Majesty the Queen visits Lord Robert's Workshops in London, where war-disabled ex-servicemen are holding their annual exhibition of handicrafts. The Queen chats with Patrick O'Egan, who is suffering with chest trouble contracted whilst serving in India. Despite their severe handicaps, the disabled produce work of extremely high quality and skill. Some of the small wooden articles are made by Richard Brett, a former Lance Corporal, who shows Her Majesty how, although he is blind has no hands, and is partially deaf, he is able to work as a carpenter.

During a stay of nearly an hour, the Queen buys several Christmas presents for her family.