ROYAL FILM PERFORMANCE.

The stars assemble in the Empire's lounge, to await the Queen. Stewart Granger is over from Hollywood to make a film. And now Her Majesty arrives. Reginald Bromhead, President of the Cinematograph Trade Benevolent Fund, welcomes the Queen. The Fund will receive all the proceeds of the Royal Show.

The stars wait in line to be presented to Her Majesty, who makes her way from the foyer to the lounge. Another Hollywood visitor is Jane Russell. She and seventeen other stars have been chosen to meet the Queen, Prince Philip and Princess Margaret. After a few words with Brenda de Bunsie, Her Majesty moves on to meet Valentina Cortese, the Italian actress, who is so overcome by the occasion, that she can hardly reply to the Queen. Now it's the turn of Stewart Granger, one of the stars of the Royal film, and his wife Jean Simmons.

Jack Hawkins, Britain's number one star, meets Her Majesty.

Anna Neagle curtseys low to the Queen. Her Majesty, who wears a full-skirted dress of white tulle, now meets Michael Redgrave.

Jane Russell wears a strapless ivory and gold gown embroidered with sequins.

Peter Ustinov, who produced the stage show which accompanies the royal film, is the last artiste to be presented to Her Majesty, the Queen.
