

54/92.

CHELSEA V. RED BANNER.

Red Banner, Hungary's number two club team, meet Chelsea at Stamford Bridge before a crowd of more than 40,000. The visitors, dressed entirely in white, have the dry pitch they'd hoped for, but at the moment, it's Chelsea on the attack. Armstrong teams up with right-winger Parsons.

Olah, the goalie, copes with that spot of trouble. From the stands, some of the Hungarians' party see countryman Kovacs lose to his rivals who are showing already that they'll be a tough nut to crack.

Blunstone takes over. Now to Bentley who sends Blunstone away again, but it's Stubbs who sends Olah sprawling.

Red Banner swing into the attack. Centre half Dorsey to Kovacs, a name that spells trouble for the home team. Outside-right Sander is there to take the pass. A centre finds Kideginti who heads it home! Red Banner one up in the nineteenth minute.

Out for revenge come the Pensioners. Blunstone centres - McNichol takes over.

Once again Blunstone lends a hand but his shot at goal is well off target. Then Chelsea are awarded a penalty for handling despite Hungarian protests. John Harris takes it, but over the bar!

A few moments later, Parsons comes up to make amends for that disappointment. A centre to Bentley who heads it to Stubbs, and there's Chelsea's first.

One all now, and Chelsea are off again with Blunstone in the picture once more. McNichol takes the centre.

Bentley shoots - and it's a goal!

Still one down at half-time, Red Banner resume with a fierce attack.

A shot hits Harris on the hand, and the ref gives a penalty against Chelsea. Seems rather a harsh decision. Lantos, Red Banner's left-back takes it.

The Hungarian's trainer seems disgusted as well he might. Now Blunstone and Parsons lead a raid, and here comes penalty number three. Watch closely as Willouse is tripped by Dorsey.

No argument about the penalty that time, so once more John Harris is chosen for the all-important kick.

Three penalties and three misses! That really makes soccer history. Red Banner that take control for most of the second half, and here they go on the raid that leads to the equalising goal. Paletas is the man who makes it 2-all, a fair result to a close contest.
