PRINCESS MARGARET RETURNS.

The R.O.A.C. Stratecruiser Canopus brings Princess Margaret back to Britain from her Caribbean tour. The Queen, Prince Philip, the Queen Mother and the royal children are at London Airport to welcome her home. Exactly on schedule, the aircraft completes its three and a half thousand mile flight, and the Queen and her family move out to greet its royal passenger. The Queen wears a fur coat and a black and white close-fitting hat. Princess Anne, who is in green, carries the little fur muff with which she has set a new fashion. Sir Miles Thomas, the R.O.A.C. Chairman, and airport officials, accompany the royal party to the 'plane.

It is nearly five weeks ago that Princess Margaret flew to the West Indies on board Canopus. Since that time she has endeared herself to many thousands of the Queen's people in the sunshine islands. The tour has been arduous, but we have learned with pride how great the triumph of the Princess during her visit. Now within Canopus, her family make their personal greetings.

And now the Princess is truly home again. And the weather is not so warm and bright as that of the Caribbean, is kind for this happy moment. Her Royal Highness, (whose clothes during her tour won great admiration) has chosen a fur coat and a close-fitting green hat for her return to London.

The Princess thanks the crew who brought her safely home, and the royal children also say "thank you".

The nation adds its welcome to Princess Margaret who will long be remembered with affection by the West Indies as the "Dolly Princess".
