

ROYAL TOUR OF SCOTLAND.

When the Queen and the Duke visit Queen's College, Dundee, everything welcomes them except the weather, which seems to have forgotten what month it is. But the students remember that Raleigh had an idea in a similar emergency, and what was good enough for Sir Walter is good enough for them.

Professor Dow tells the Queen: "A nice gesture by four of your future doctors" Comments the Duke: "They're a bit soiled, chaps, but it was your idea".

In Middlethian, the royal couple visit Middleton-Camp Residential School, which runs two-to-four week courses in term-time and holiday camps after the schools break up.

Organised by the Scottish National Camps Association, this 25 acre estate can accommodate 250 children and teachers. A wonderful change for both kiddies and staff.

The Duke has another call to pay now - to the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders - so he leaves the school grounds by helicopter. With such a full programme, an excellent way of getting around.
