PRAGUE CHILDREN'S FESTIVAL.

Mass physical training displays have been popular in Czechoslovakia for many years, and this year's National Spartakiada is one of the most spectacular yet.

In Prague's immense Strahov Stadium, seventy-six thousand boys and girls make living patterns on the broad turf - a miracle of organisation and timing.

Any choreographer would be proud of this - but these are schoolchildren, not ballet dancers. P.T. may sound dull, but these youngsters believe it needn't look it.

A hundred and seventy thousand people have packed the stadium to watch. And they watch with an expert eye, because thousands of them took part in the same sort of event when they were at school.

Once upon a time P.T. instructors only needed big muscles and a loud voice. Nowadays, they have to be artists as well.
