

C-475001
5/71

BERLIN POLICE TATTOO.

West Berlin police keep flags flying in front of 100,000 spectators in the great Olympia Stadium. It's the Police Corps Tattoo, a traditional event in the German capital. Berlin bobbies show that they can wriggle out of anything - or jump over it: this trick is very useful for picking your way through a traffic jam.

Berlin, the divided city, has two separate police forces serving two different Governments. Both forces carry arms, and both are constantly on their toes - an uneasy state of affairs unparalleled in any capital in the world. But there's been no serious friction for many months. Perhaps Berliners are getting a little tired of friction.

Still, you can't stop some people playing with fire. As long as it's only this kind, we'll agree that Berlin police are wonderful!