RUSSIAN ADMIRAL GIVES A PARTY.

The Russian cruiser Sverdlov throws a party for Portsmouth schoolchildren. The correct compliments are exchanged as Captain Krivosheev greets the guests. The Sverdlov is the flagship of Admiral Golovko, commander-in-chief of the Soviet Baltic Fleet, commanding the goodwill squadron which has been visiting Britain.

And the goodwill's expressed in a form the guests really appreciate.

There won't be much left in those boxes by the time they get home - but the boxes themselves are handsome enough to keep as souvenirs.

And talking of souvenirs, how about a Russian admiral's autograph?

An unexpected item in the visit is a London concert by members of the squadron. Despite the short notice, it packs the Empress Hall for two performances.
