

ATTLEE AND CHURCHILL.

After 33 years in Parliament, and 20 years at the helm of the Labour Party, Mr. Clement Attlee leaves the House of Commons for the last time. Like his old colleague and rival, Sir Winston Churchill, he is the kind of man to whom resignation from leadership does not mean an end to political struggle. He takes with him to the House of Lords the respect of friends and opponents alike.

Later, at Transport House, Mr. Attlee has this to say: "Tell us, Mr. Attlee, have you any misgivings about entering the House of Lords?";

Meanwhile the outstanding elder statesman of them all, Sir Winston Churchill, is made the first recipient of a new American honour - the Williamsburg Award. The presentation is made before a distinguished audience by Mr. Winthrop Rockefeller, grandson of John D. Rockefeller. Symbol of the award is a silver copy of the town crier's bell of Colonial Williamsburg, the Virginian cradle of America's democracy. It is an honour, says Sir Winston, that this award for great services to the cause of liberty and justice, should be first to go to a Briton;
