

INDIAN VILLAGE SPORTS.

Bulgaria and Khrushchev find themselves up against a traffic problem when they visit a Punjabi village at the end of the much publicised tour of India. This village is part of the Senapat community project launched by Nehru's government three years ago, which now covers nearly 500 square miles and includes some 300,000 people. It seems to be a success. Certainly, these Punjabi peasants are eager to show it to their visitors.

Change of clothes and the weather, and this night almost be some sort of Highland gathering. The cattle exhibits have humps instead of hair, and the crowds show their excitement rather differently, but the games are just as incomprehensible to a foreigner. This looks like a form of rugger without a ball. The attacker has to hold his breath - if he can.

Well, I don't know. Here's something comparatively simple - wrestling between famous strong-man Dara Singh and local boy Hardit Singh.

But wrestling is child's play compared with this sort of toughness - a yoga performance by Swami Devmurti. Still room for a few more on top!

Did somebody say "encore"? All right, how about this?

Well, if that's yoga, he can keep it!
