BOXING RIOT.

At Kings Hall, Belfast, Charlie Hill of Glasgow (with the light stripe) challenges British featherweight champion Billy Kelly of Derry for his title. The Scots challenger, one of the tallest featherweights in the game, has a bad time to begin with. No one gives him more than an outside chance against the Irish boy.

But Hill recovers quickly from the first onslaught, and fights back gamely. By the end of round one, the fans are ready for surprises.

Hill's an intelligent fighter, but Kelly has the experience. Early in round two, he has the challenger down for a count of eight.

Hill's up again - but shaken.

Kelly chases Hill to the ropes, and lands a right to the face.

Now it's the challenger's turn. He battles grimly on, and for the remaining rounds it's a hard-fought and very close contest. Many of the crowd expect a draw at least, but the referee gives the verdict to - Charlie Hill!

Hill's jubilant, but the Belfast fans can hardly believe their eyes.

After a few bewildering moments, pandemonium breaks loose. Kings Hall becomes a scene of one of the most amazing demonstrations in the history of boxing.

Not a pretty scene - and most unfair on two very sporting featherweights who'd put up a good clean fight.

So Charlie Hill takes the title back to Scotland - after an evening in Belfast he'll remember for a long time!
