IKE TIES UP.

President Eisenhower, on holiday in Georgia, visits a golf links for the first time since his heart attack last September.

Using an electric "golfmobile" (as he often did before his illness) the President tries a cautious nine-hole match. He says he's been looking forward to it - but he adds he's a little frightened of his strokes and himself. However, his doctor reports that Ike's in very good condition after his first game of golf, and his putting hasn't suffered - too much.
