A VILLAGE OF THE TRENTINO OVERFLOODED

The recent continuous rains have caused rainses landslips from the steep walls of the surrounding mounts, and consequently a flowing of mud has everflooded the little village of Zambana in the Trentino region.

Some time ago, on October, the same cataclysm menaced already the poor village, but at the last moment the mud river was succeeded to deviate toward another direction, and the dislodged people could return to their homes.

But now too much material continuously falling down increases terrifically the "cold lava" and the population are compelled to quit again their huts though reluctantly.

Should the rains continue, the quick help and the dykes settled up in a hurry would never be sufficient to bank up the power of the mud tide, that would mean the end of ZAMBANA.
