

JET RESCUE

BARUCH-Fitzgerald

Jet fighters take off from the deck of the carrier Essex, on maneuvers in the Pacific off San Diego, Calif.

In the precision flying necessary for carrier work, the chance of a mishap rides on every landing. This time the ship's arresting gear fails.

A helicopter, ready for just such emergencies, is aloft in seconds to rescue the pilot. Speed is the watchword. And, barely minutes later, Lieutenant Herbert Camp is back aboard the Essex. Thanks to skill and split second teamwork, he can appreciate the feeling behind the old pilots' saying that the good landings are the ones you can walk a way from.
