WEIST -- Aarsoth

Thirty-six young seminarians are ordained as Jesuit priests in New York. Among them is Avery Dulles -- nearest camera -- thirty-seven-year-old son of Secretary of State Dulles.

Cardinal Spellman presides at the solemn service during which the candidates for priesthood prostrate themselves before the altar as a symbol of humility. After the ordination, the elder Dulles -- a prominent Protestant leader -- says he is happy that his son, in his own way, has found communion with God.
