PEOPLE IN THE NEWS.

Washington's Walter Reed Hospital signs out its number one patient. Walking slowly, President Eisenhower leaves on his wife's arm, three weeks after his operation, pale and half a stone lighter. Still, he manages a smile for photographers and well-wishers. Avoiding questions on his election plans, Ike speeds away to his Gettysburg farm - for a fortnight's convalescence and some very hard thinking.

When you're America's Top Blond, it's no good hoping for a quiet honeymoon. Marilyn Monroe and her new husband, playwright Arthur Miller, at least managed to get married secretly, but now the press catch up with them on the Miller farm in Roxbury, Connecticut. Of course, Marilyn's quite accustomed to being a public institution by now - and if Arthur isn't, he'll have plenty of chance to learn!
