

SOME FAMILY?

For Mrs. Bertha Whyte, three hundred nappies is quite a normal washing. To fill in time, she cleans shoes - and shoes - and shoes. On her farm at Bowmanville, Ontario, Mrs. Whyte and her husband care for 39 youngsters, from bottle babies upwards. They're all adopted from broken or poverty-stricken homes, and Mr. and Mrs. Whyte take no reward for their labour of love.

The Whytes are not rich - except in happiness, and in that they count themselves millionaires. They open their doors to any child who comes - and they just keep on coming.
