

THIRTY-NINE TOTS

Weist-Fitzgerald

For Mrs. Bertha Whyte, three hundred diapers is a normal washday.

Mrs. Whyte is also used to shining shoes . . . and shoes . . . and shoes.

On her cheerful farm at Bowmanville, Ontario, thirty-nine youngsters ranging from bottle babies to hungry older children are tenderly cared for without reward by Mr. and Mrs. Whyte. All are from broken or poverty-stricken homes. With deep faith, the Whytes take in all who come, and they just keep coming.

Poor in riches, the Whytes count themselves rich in spirit, for the little children have come unto them.
