THIS IS TOMORROW.

Anyone who thinks abstract artists are too abstract should drop in at the Whitechapel Art Gallery, where there's an exhibition devoted to collaboration between architects, painters, and sculptors. They point out that yesterday's tomorrow is not today - so maybe today's tomorrow won't be quite what you expected.

There's no reason why sculpture should be static - and come to that, there's no reason why paintings should be pretty. Though some of us may have to wait till tomorrow before we appreciate all of it. Ah? Back to normal!

And this is quite familiar. Just where the sculpture and painting end and the architecture begins, it's difficult to say - but after all, that's the whole idea.

All right, we're looking.

All right, we're thinking!

All right, we're focused. But don't be too sure our houses won't look like this tomorrow. Anything can happen.

Remember, you probably wouldn't have believed yesterday what is happening today. It's all a matter of viewpoint.
