

OLD LADY AT THE PICTURES.

Old age pensioners come to a Potters Bar cinema for the hundred-and-first birthday party of Mrs. Mary Budd. The party is arranged by the Red Cross of the district, with many gifts from local traders, and the guests come from nearby old peoples' homes.

Although she's 101, and a grandmother many times over, Mrs. Budd is still full of life, and when the time comes to blow out the candles, she hardly needs the help of the Chairman of the Urban District Council, and his wife.

Like many of her friends, Mrs. Budd is a regular cinemagoer. She prefers the children's matinees - especially the cowboy films, where she gets as much from the audience as from the screen.

And if Mrs. Budd has any say in the matter, she intends to see quite a few matinees yet!
