BUILDING EXHIBITION.

A building plant exhibition at Gosforth Park, Newcastle, proves that there's nothing in building which can't be mechanised these days - not even the foreman. From the moment you start clearing the foundations, there's a machine for everything. You want an iron drainpipe laid in a certain spot? Why not fly it there?

Just clamp it into place in the builder's yard - tighten it up - and it's ready for delivery.

Maybe the day's not far off when the helicopter will replace the lorry for this sort of work - and the road to a man's house won't be churned up before he starts living in it.
