PEOPLE IN THE NEWS.

Richard Mostowy, a 130year old Polish boy, comes to London to be reunited with his father who has not seen him since he was three months old. At the Drury Lane flat of Yan Mostowy and his British wife, young Richard unpacks the gifts he has brought from Poland. And his father's favourite sausages.

This reunion spells new hope for many European families split up by the Cold War - for it was arranged amicably between British and Polish officials. A welcome sign of more human times.

Another exile returning home - this time from Britain is Seretse Khama, who has lived here for six years with his English wife Ruth and their young family. Seretse has renounced the chieftainship of the Bamangwato, and he is now allowed to return to his tribe. Before leaving, he thanks the British people for all the kindness they have shown to his family and himself. His future plans? To help his countrymen along the road to democracy.
