PRINCESS AT DAR-ES-SALAAM.

At Dar-es-Salaam, Tanganyika, Princess Margaret receives loyal greetings from local chiefs at a barasa - a tribal gathering - which is attended by over 50,000 Africans, dressed in their most magnificent finery. The clothes may be strictly, formal, as befits a royal occasion - but the welcome is exuberant; and when Africa feels exuberant - Africa dances.

The Princess leaves her car for a closer look at the dancing - and in a matter of seconds, she's surrounded by hundreds of cheering Africans. It's all the police can do to clear a way for her.

A somewhat overwhelming greeting - but nobody seems to mind. Least of all the Princess!
