

TIARA FASHION SHOW.

Here's an interesting fashion show - which seems to be going over well with the audience. Ignoring them for a moment, we can tell you it's a display of a new fabric called Tiara, which is a hundred per cent acetate - that means it won't crease or shrink - and it can be used for anything from hats to evening dresses, or the most glamorous of pyjamas and dressing gowns. These pyjamas are in amethyst Tiara, trimmed with broderie anglaise, and the dressing gown is tailored in orchid pink, piped with amethyst.

Modelling's a very exacting profession, but there are always plenty of ambitious youngsters who want to join it. Skilful make-up is an important item in their education, and the best way to learn is to watch an experienced colleague and adapt her techniques to your own complexion and colouring.

This strapless embroidered evening gown is in pink pearl - one of the 45 colours in which Tiara is made.

Time for the new apprentice to make her bow. Not bad for a beginner...She already knows that the secret is to persuade your audience that they, too, can look like you.

Take no notice of that wrinkled brow. She's just thinking of the hobble skirt she's got to wear at the next show.
