PEES' CHRISTMAS.

Among the guests at this P.R.S.A. Christmas Party for Animals are Quail, London's oldest police horse, and several swans rescued from an oily fate in the River Thames. Catering is quite a problem, because the guests have such widely differing tastes. The big cake, for instance, is made of chopped hay, bran, oats, and treacle, tastefully decorated with icing and carrots.

All things considered, the table manners are pretty good.

Most of the guests are civilians, of course, but there's one from the R.A.F. - Flight-Sergeant Lewis, a retired Mascot. Several of the others have stage or screen experience, so they treat the camera with studied nonchalance.

Now why weren't his reindeer invited?
