STORM OVER A PYLON.

There's trouble in the air at Willow Farm, Staines. A row over a pylon, between Farmer Thomas Jones and his son Bryn on the one hand, and the Central Electricity Authority on the other. Bryn Jones in carrying out his threat to sabotage the pylon unless the C.E.A. discuss his father's claim to more compensation. This pylon is one of four on the Jones farm, and the C.E. A. have offered £155 for the damage done to the land. Farmer Jones wants more than twice that; the C.E.A. promise to talk it over, but they take too long for the Jones' liking. So eldest son Bryn uses his sledge-hammer.

Over twelve hundred pounds' worth of damage in a few seconds. At last the authorities react, and there's a Court injunction to prevent the Joneses damaging any more pylons. The big question - since Bryn announced his plans beforehand, why did nobody try to stop him?
