THE QUEEN IN DENMARK.

King Federick and his family take Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip to the Royal Copenhagen Porcelain Factory - an essential item on the Royal programme in Denmark, for the creations of this famous factory have been delighting Europe for the past 200 years. A set of figures in Danish national costume is presented to the British guests.

At a municipal nursery, greetings are in English, Danish schools make a point of teaching the children their geography lessons - which, (as one would expect from this friendly little country) lay stress on international understanding from the earliest years.

Nearly 5,000 bottles of lager form a graceful welcome to the Carlsberg Brewery. Every year, 320 million bottles are filled and exported all over the world by this big plant. The up-to-date machinery (much of which is made in Britain) so intrigues the Royal visitors that they linger in the bottling department, upsetting their own time-table by ten minutes.

Well - who wouldn't linger?
