NEWS FROM AMERICA:

A U.S. Army Helicopter crashes in a Louisiana forest. Ground crews chop away the entangling trees to make room for a novel kind of aerial rescue. Another helicopter is going to attempt a salvage job. The stripped fuselage is ready for the lift. And off she goes!

Safely away! For the first time ever, a helicopter has rescued one of its own kind!

Another "First-ever" is the waterborne flying saucer, designed by a Milwaukee boat-builder. Inspired by the legendary visitors from outer space, this strange fishing craft is nevertheless strictly practical. No crowding, plenty of deck space for everybody, and no tangle of lines when fishing begins. Powered by outboard motors, she can run circles round any conventional boat.

No more excuses about the big ones that get away. This craft can go round them till they're dizzy!
