

KID'S RODEO.

Here's a rodeo at Salinas, California, where the cowboys are really boys - ranging from seven to fourteen years old. Some people maintain that's a bit too young to be learning how to throw a steer - or vice versa - but to even things up a little, the steers aren't grown up either.

And so another cowboy bites the dust! Still, it was a good try - and a lot better than trying to play leapfrog with 'em.

They certainly pack a lot of muscle. And any youngster who can hang on, even for a few seconds, has got what it takes to make a real cowboy - whichever way you look at him!
