NEWS FLASHES:

The Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh, in the robes of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, walk in procession at Windsor Castle with the Knights Companions of the Order. The occasion is the installation of two new Companions. All the Royal Members are here - the Queen Mother walks with the Duke of Gloucester.

The new Knights Companions are ex-NATO chief Lord Ismay and Lord Middleton, Chancellor of Hull University. Earl Alexander, Viscount Montgomery, Earl Mountbatten, and other service chiefs are here, and the Duke of Norfolk, the Premier Earl - each taking his appointed place in the solemn pageantry of England's oldest and most colourful order of chivalry.

The American Army releases first pictures of the Hawk - new close-range ack-ack missile for use against low-flying targets. Once launched the Hawk - like its long-range companion, the Nike - hunts its prey automatically. So swiftly does it find the target - a radio-controlled fighter - the camera hardly sees it arrive.

A deadly recruit to the armoury of the West.

A flu epidemic that is sweeping the Orient hits Japan. Schools are practically empty in Tokyo, for the chief victims are children - more than 130,000 cases are reported in the space of a few days. Thousands of youngsters in clinics for inoculation, but no serum has been found completely effective as yet. Tokyo hospitals, are filled. This epidemic has spread to many countries, causing concern to health services throughout the world.

A cliff-top casino in Algiers is the scene of the latest bomb outrage in the North African terrorist war against French rule. The bomb wrecked the floor where many young people were dancing; ten were killed, and 80 admitted to hospital with severe injuries.

What the terrorists hoped to gain, it is hard to see - for both Europeans and Arabs were among the victims of this senseless act of murder....
