

BRITISH TOURISTS IN MOSCOW

This is a scene that could be observed on the Minsk Highway not far from Moscow just recently....

Representatives of the British Embassy in Moscow have driven out here to meet their countrymen -- British tourists...

A group of Englishmen, and among them, Mr. Ronald H.R. Hayes, Road Service Manager of the Automobile Association, Mr. Humphreys, his secretary, Messrs Michael Eden and William Jackson, farmers, Mr. Fleming Davis, correspondent of the Times, Miss Patricia Smyllis, correspondent of the Daily Express, have made a motor trip on four cars covering the route - Moscow-Brest-Moscow.

We see them now returning to the Soviet capital.

In Moscow the tourists see the landmarks of the city, its highways and squares. As they drive through Gorky street, the visitors stop at Soviet Square, where the monument to the founder of Moscow -- Yuri Dolgoruky -- stands.

And this is the parking place for the British cars at the Hotel Metropole, where the tourists are staying.

From here there is a view of the Bolshoi Theatre...

Withing a few days the British motorists will continue their journey.
