TOMMY GETS MOVING:

Rock'n Roll star Tommy Stalle and his mother are moving from the terrace house in Bermondsey which has been their home for 11 years. Tommy's mother, Mrs. Betty Hicks, isn't too sure about it - and what the cat will think, even his stepfather doesn't know. But Tommy reckons Mum deserves something better. The Bermondsey house only costs fifteen bob a week, and since he became famous Tommy's income has soared to something like a thousand pounds a week.

Some of the neighbours will miss him badly. Even though they've grown up alongside him, they're his fans - and don't mind making their feelings known.

Neighbours watch as the last of the family belongings are loaded on to the van - and No. 52 is deserted. It's only four miles to Tommy's new home, in Catford - and there's something familiar about the audience, too. But apart from that, we might be in a different world. Oh yes, one thing's the same - Mother's still running things, and very efficiently too. She says: "Tommy's done it all up specially for me - contemporary style. But after 11 years in Bermondsey, it's hard to say whether I like the idea. Still - it's very nice".
