

PATHE PROBES THAT GHOST!

This house is Pilgrim's Cottage, Wilbarston. It is haunted. That, at least, is the claim of Mrs. Mabel Cullen, who asks the Reverend John Ashplant - a Methodist minister from nearby Corby - to help deal with this unearthly visitation. The Minister leaves after giving what help he can - Tackling the ghost from another angle is spiritualist Michael Ahearns. He believes the house was once used for Black Magic and in the cellar, directs digging operations in search of evidence.

Meanwhile, at the front door.

Our interviewer Bill Symon calls to ask Mrs. Cullen about the ghost - an inoffensive one whom she and her daughters call "George".

In the main bedroom of the seventeenth-century cottage; George first appeared. Since then, Mrs. Cullen - the only one to see him so far - has refused to sleep in it. The villagers say he's angry at being disturbed by the digging up of tombstones a few yards away, and is trying to find a new resting place. It seems a good moment for medium Michael Ahearns to put himself in a trance and consult his chinese spirit guide, Lee Wong.

So now all is well; George is no longer earth-bound, and peace will reign at Wilbarston.