

57/90.

ROYAL FILM PERFORMANCE:

The biggest social event of the screen world's year - the Royal Film Performance, in aid of the Cinematograph Trades Benevolent Fund. Easily recognised is teenagers' hero Tommy Steele, the Rock 'n' Roll King - and here comes Jill Ireland.

Italy's Sophie Loren chats with Britain's Yvonne Mitchell and Jack Hawkins; and from America, Jayne Mansfield.

Jack Hawkins again - this time with Kenneth More. Ken brings his family, including four-year-old Sarah. And here are the Queen and the Duke being welcomed by Mr. Ralph Brownhead, chairman, and Sir Philip Warter, trustee of the Fund.

Sir Philip welcomes Princess Alexandra, who accompanies the Queen and the Duke and Lord Rank escorts the Queen towards the waiting celebrities - most legendary figure of all being Cecil B. de Mille, whose epics are screen history.

Actress Heather Sears waits her turn - but first it's Sarah More's big moment. She's so overcome at having to present a bouquet to the Queen that she has to be reminded to curtsy.

After Sarah - a word with Sarah's father.

Tommy Steele looks a bit warm - so the Queen asks him how he manages under the arc lights at Elstree.

Next to be presented is George Baker, co-star of "No Time for Tears".

Next Yvonne Mitchell, the brilliant star of "Woman in the Dressing Gown", and Michael Craig.

The Queen meets Anne Haywood.

"I've just been to your country", the Queen tells Jayne Mansfield, "and they gave me a wonderful time". And Jayne says: "May I tell you ma'am, that I think you're looking wonderful?" Thank you, "says the Queen, "so are you".

And what did Sophia Loren say to the Queen? She was so nervous that when we asked her afterwards, she couldn't remember!