Camp "Friedland"

Camp Friedland, situated near the Iron Curtain at the partition-line between East and West, is the official receiving institution for the refugees from East European countries. More than 12 million displaced East Germans were resettled after the war in the West. After being processed in Camp Friedland they are distributed among the 11 West German States for resettlement.

This is the first transport of Germans from the former German Reich territory now administered by the Poles and Soviet Russians who have been allowed to take live stock and personal belongings with them. They are being repatriated to rejoin family members in West Germany. At present 500 repatriates are passing through Camp Friedland every day.
