

PRINCESS MARGARET IN BRITISH GULANA.

Princess Margaret is now known as the "Sunshine Princess" to the friendly people of British Guiana - for although the rainy season has set in, the sun still manages to appear for most of her outdoor engagements. She wears a pale yellow dress and hat which go well with her unofficial title as she watches a big parade of decorated floats in Georgetown, the capital. Everybody from the Government to the trade unions is represented; for this is a royal occasion, and it's May Day, and it's a general fiesta - all rolled into one.

The Princess joins in the laughter at this typically Caribbean sentiment.

You can't have a Caribbean procession without a steel band - so it's just as well the rain has held off.
