

CANNES FILM FESTIVAL:

The famous, the world-be-famous, and the plain rubbernecks gather at Cannes for the International Film Festival. Marcel Achard is President of the jury who will pass judgement on the efforts of stars like Sophia Loren, and of the directors, cameramen and scriptwriters of many different lands to whom an award from Cannes is worth quite as much as an Oscar. Prince Rainier and Princess Grace are here to cast a neighbourly - and in her case, an expert - eye on the proceedings.

Mitzi Gayner's one of those people it's impossible not to notice.

And so is the Begum Aga Khan.

Danielle Darrieux, whose fame is an international as the Festival itself - and Mitzi again, cementing Franco-American relations. Behind the ballyhoo, there's a lot of serious work to be done - but what's a Festival without a spot of ballyhoo?
