PRINCESS MARGARET IN CANADA:

The lovely Princess Margaret made yet more friends in Canada as she drove through excited crowds packing the route to the Toronto Town Hall. On this happy and almost informal occasion, Toronto's Mayor Phillips presented her with a golden jewel box, a gift from the people of the "Queen City".

At Niagara Falls, wearing a practical cloche hat, the Princess met a Mohawk Chief resplendant in some fetching Indian headgear.

Less glamorous but more practical was the hooded rain-coat worn as a protection from the flying spray from the roaring falls, through which runs the border of America and Canada.

Another day, another change of clothes on her visit to the capital, Ottawa. There she attended the opening of the impressive new City Hall which cost three and a half million dollars to build. Despite many tiring days of travel over the vast Dominion, the Princess remains as always radiant and charming.

Princess Margaret's Canadian visit has been acclaimed by all.
