

KING OF MOROCCO TOURS
VILLAGES:

Unbounded enthusiasm marked the royal progress of King Mohammed 2nd when he toured villages in the neighbourhood of Fez. His young daughter accompanied him on part of the journey. Accustomed as the King had been to such scenes ever since he returned from exile, it is doubtful if the general acclamation at any time exceeded this.

After much thought the astute Mohammed has made his country a member of the Arab League, of which Egypt is the most influential member, but NOT of the United Arab Republic, in which President Nasser is very much the dominant figure. Though Moroccan villagers may not know a great deal about such high politics their confidence in the King seems to be complete.

In the Arab world several rulers are uncertain where they'll be, even in the near future. King Mohammed seems to be as securely on his throne as any monarch could desire.
