

PARK AT YOUR DESK!

We live in the space age, but the one thing no motorist can find when he wants it, is just a little space, to park. Even in Washington, and most other cities in the land renowned for wide open spaces, a place to leave the car is - well, like asking for the moon. So there's a big welcome for the idea used in the Cafritz Building, an office block with parking space built in. Accommodation for close on 500 cars. Just back in, and it'll be there waiting at the end of the day, with no distance to walk.

The boss can take a very favoured place. He gets out of one driver's seat and just strolls across to another one. Nothing could be more convenient than that.

Of course, the big man's no clock-watcher, but when the time does come to go home, everything is to hand. Short of being transported into his own home who could think of anything to beat this? A wonderful start but, what till you get outside....
