

HOLLAND: MAN'S PLACE - THE KITCHEN.

What's cooking in Holland? Nothing less than a domestic revolution. Some husbands in Limburg decided they must learn cookery; so they organized a class, took their coats off, and tackled a few menus. Most men can lend a hand with the washing up, some can even make beds; but cooking a real meal's a different proposition altogether. If the hand that stirs the saucepan rules the world, some hitherto henpecked specimens will soon be asserting themselves as never before. Besides, when your wife's away there's no reason why a trained man can't enjoy the best of everything.

Half the secret is to go by the book, keep an eye on everything and observe split second timing.

Top class cooking's hot stuff. Drop it on the floor and he'll have to clean up himself.

At last, the proof of the pudding. Nothing earthly can help them now.

It was a meal any woman would have been proud to serve. Given a clear field a man could invite the bots round to share it. But maybe it's best not to be king of the kitchen. Even the best dinner has that ghastly aftermath.
