

TROPICAL BIRDS EXHIBITION.

All they had to do was, just watch the birdie and the pictures would be perfect. Hearlem staged an exhibition of caged birds, all of tropical varieties. Like Britain, Holland has millions of homes which wouldn't be complete nowadays without a feathered pet. Main attraction of the Exhibition was the Van Houten Bird Circus, illustrating what can be done by a little patient training. These two are parakeets.

Even more clever, perhaps was the solo act; a sort of feathered rope trick. Both feet on the ladder of success.

He's the only high wire walker to do it more or less parrot fashion.

Finally, the Sleeping Beauties. The only ones on any stage that go to bed in feathers.

Come on, girls, here's the Prince!
