

STUDENTS SEE SAHARA OIL.

To the new oilfields in the north of the Sahara went 200 French students, spending their summer vacation learning about the richest oil discovery France has made. If all goes well this oil will be the best thing that's happened to France in modern times. That the oil is there, in fabulous quantity, seems to be beyond doubt. It remains to be seen whether it can be transported to France without stirring up political trouble of the kind that oil often brings. The French are confident they'll make all possible use of the new-found wealth.
