

FABULOUS FISHING.

Off the northern coast of Australia, skipper George Harritos nosed into Alligator River, with a crew of four Mallville Islanders. Rifles were carried, for this is crocodile country. On this trip George was after Barramundi, a large fish plentiful in these tropical waters. Thirty-five pounders are common. But a seven-foot crocodile was an embarrassment. Only a baby, but lethal. That'll keep your trap shut - Feller.

After eight days they went back to Darwin with a fine catch, worth £800. Quite a net profit.
