

REFUGEES AT PRAYER.

Lights shone reproachfully in the moral darkness, as refugees from more than ten countries behind the Iron Curtain sought spiritual solace at the church of Sacre Coeur in Paris.

The 2,000 bearing the flame of hope went to pray for relatives oppressed by tyranny in their homelands, Hungarians especially. For though their country is now under consideration by the United Nations, its government announces that the Russian army will remain in Hungary. In an all-night vigil at Sacre Coeur, they asked Divine help for all refugees, the oft forgotten outcasts of this thoughtless age.
