

DUKE TOURS CLUBS.

For the London Federation of Boys' Clubs it was the biggest night of the year. At Wapping the Duke of Edinburgh popped in, to explain the Five Year Plan to open 20 more clubs in the London area.

At another club, near the Oval, there was further evidence of the good work going on, and a fine time being had by all. The 5-year-plan will cost £200,000, but the Duke said that money presented no difficulty at all. The big need for helpers, who can start bands and hobbies, and keep the ball rolling. What apity the Duke's otherwise engaged; he's obviously got a genius for that sort of thing.

The sooner the new clubs are built, the better. More of this and a big part of the teenage problem will cease to exist.
