

SCHOOLBOYS' EXHIBITION

Olympia for a couple of weeks is the mecca of youngsters from near and far. The Schoolboys' Exhibition is on again, and aren't mothers thankful their dear little boys have got somewhere to go, instead of moping at home on a pouring wet day. In the Trocart grand prix they all feel like Jack Brabham roaring round Le Mans.

Novelty this year is the hovercraft race. They skim on a cushion of air, produced electric fans, travelling just like the real thing. The famous Trevor Bailey shows the next generation of Test bowlers the grip that will send South Africans and Aussies scuttling back to the pavilion. And Popeye's almost a living proof of the value of spinach. And fancy standing near 400,000 volts. What it does to your hair:

All the thrills of parachute jumping. This is the Army stand, showing how real parachutes are trained. After all this it would be an unenterprising boy who decided he wanted to be an engine driver.
